

Urban Groove

The designer uses the “transformed block” and “compound transition” concept to assure the coexisting and deviating relationships between the open functionalities and the independent privacy and gives the urban residents the changed rhythms at home and the flooring efficacy of the house by making the family campaigns in diverse phases the core.

For openness and use flexibility, the designer extends the public domain room by setting up a folding door between the living room and the second bedroom to make the unclosed bedroom multifunctional e.g. the yoga room, the playroom, or the kids' gallery and places a sectional sofa for more family interactions as well as for lighting, visual wideness and moving line with free openness; moreover, the unclosed bedroom can be a private independent domain by using the special hardware and detailed mechanisms if necessary with ensured stability and soundproofing.

As a one-story 89 m² housing residence, the design plan must meet the everyday needs of the couple owners and their newborn twins' current nursery and future needs at once, so the designer reserves the three-room layout, gives the house openness and privacy by flexible furnishings and partitions, makes the second bedroom part of the living room for family activities, includes the corridor and the dining kitchen in one space for more natural light when they are unclosed.

Arc

The arc lamp strip continues to the private domain.
The symmetric effect implies wideness and wholeness the space wise.
The arc-inspired components used to all the exposed corners remove safety concerns for the twins in motion.

multi-purpose dining kitchen

The multi-purpose dining kitchen is equipped with the L-shaped storage cabinet of which one side serves as the kitchen for cooking and storing the appliances and the cookware and tableware and the other side i.e. the platform in the center serves as the workstation for the male owner.

The master bedroom in the basic tone with sleek lines besides well-organized storage has a rational but cozy visual finish.

tranquil living atmosphere

The designer makes the rich family activities the core in daily life by a design plan based on sleekness, nature and safety, forms a sophisticated tranquil living atmosphere by using the low-saturated Morandi tone, assures more lighting and variations with open and flexible partitions and furnishings, and includes family interactions and nursery safety with warm hardwood flooring.
